The awe and wonder of Light (and Dark)

There is no magic formula that will guarantee success, but one really simple, natural element of our environment that in my experience comes close, is the use of light and its absence - dark.

Light and dark are naturally occurring states that children will be very familiar with, so this makes them easily accessible and a good starting point for learning.

Light play is particularly successful when children have the opportunity to control the light source. When they are able to do this, they are not only exploring concepts such as cause and effect - like pushing a switch to make the torch come on and off. They are also having some powerful control over the emotional connections of anyone who is within their near vicinity.

Whilst we can support children in their investigation of light by providing them with opportunities to notice light, both natural and man-made, the most powerful thing that we can do is give them the independence to investigate, manipulate and experience light in a way that is meaningful to them.

By Alistair Bryce-Clegg

INNOVATION

We are proud to launch our unique, innovative Early Years Shadow Projector. This projector is so exciting, it offers so many possibilities, meets all the stringent safety requirements necessary, is rechargeable, portable, and so very versatile.

THE INDEPENDENT CHILD

What is perhaps most exciting is that the child is the instigator, is at the heart of all the decision making rather than reacting to a light source placed there by the educator and they then go and work with the chosen materials around them. Accessibility is a major factor, and it is most importantly accessible to the child. The curious, independent learner evaluates how to disperse the light, how to alter the sharpness of a shadow, how to make images larger or smaller. Trial and error, hypothesising, amending, manoeuvring, and evaluating are all part of this truly integrated STEAM based learning approach. Importantly it is the children who make the decisions using a plethora of social, cognitive, and cross-curricular skills.

STEAM BASED LEARNING

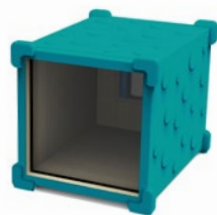

When light is part of play it lends itself to a host of learning scenarios. Our aim is for children to have a STEAM based approach with blended themes, skills, and opportunities. We want science, technology, engineering, art, and maths to merge seamlessly, allowing children to use skills realistically, practically, meaningfully and contextually.

Light also provides huge potential for children to be able to manipulate and view the world they inhabit in a variety of different ways. Shining light onto an object can completely change how it looks. Shining a light through it can change its colour. Shining a light at it can create a shadow that can be tiny or huge, the possibilities are endless.
